Description

Indeterminate. Mid season (75-80 days from transplant). This remarkable heirloom wild Tomato, also known as " Geoge Curtiss Spoon" or " Red Currant" for the size and color of its fruit, is a parent to many modern Tomatoes today, yet is still vigorously producing! The fruit is exceptionally small — the size of a pea — and orange-red, with a very mild flavor. Trusses of 10-12 fruits, fruits do not fall like most currant tomatoes. Literally thousands of fruits per plant. The perfect tomato for decorating dishes, snacking or mixing into a fresh summer tomato salads.
